

Fairy Tales- Mix & Match Colour Words Practice

Instructions for teachers

*There are three versions of this activity. The first one is given on one page to save paper and photocopying. The second is on cards to make it more flexible and to make matching up a more physical activity. However, the mix or match activity is usually best if done as a whole book, with each page cut into flaps which are turned separately to make good and bad matches. This makes it similar to the many mix and match books in which the reader makes people, monsters, etc with odd matches of head, body and legs, or something like the classic book Do You Like Ketchup on Your Cornflakes? In this case there is also an actual story with a beginning, middle and end. To make a whole story, the top flaps of each page should be used in the order they are in (“Once upon a time, in a land far away that is famous for its...”, then “there was a prince with a...”, etc). However, the other flaps can be used in any order and any combination, depending on whether the readers want to make a sensible story or a silly story. All flaps have at least one sensible match and at least one silly match.*

To make a book, you need to staple the pages together on one side, then cut along the dotted lines.

After reading, children could draw suitable pictures on their own copy of the book. To save time, it’s best if the colours are just a small bubble on each page (rather than colouring in the whole flap). The colour “white” can be done with just a bubble with nothing in it, or they can colour round a white bubble in black to emphasize the lack of colour. If you want to save time and photocopying, another option is for each kid to draw one picture of their favourite combination, instead of drawing pictures for every page.

They could also make their own versions of this mix and match activity, perhaps keeping the same starters but changing the colours and/ or objects, or just adding other options to the one-page version. The activity should also work with science fiction stories.

They could also write out their favourite matches and then perhaps draw pictures for them, maybe in a normal book format (without cut flaps to turn).

Book version

Turn the flaps to add colours and objects to each step of the story, including silly matches if you like.

Once upon a time, in a land far away that was famous for its

black

castle

there was a prince with a

brown

cave

and a

colourless

city

who went out one day to find the famous princess with a

dark blue

dress

However, on the way the prince met a

gold

horse

who lived in a

green

monster

The prince won a quick and bloody fight using his

grey

river

The prince found a

pink

room

and used that to get over the purple

rope

On the other side he found what he was looking for in a red

shield

So they went back to the prince's

ruby red

sky

And they all lived happily together in a beautiful silver

sword
