- You don't need double letters after two and/ or long vowels
 - You don't need double letters after unstressed vowels, even if they are short
 - E after a single consonant makes a short vowel sound "say its name" (makes the sounds of the letters A, E, I, O and U in the alphabet)
 - Suffixes like -ed and -ing after a short vowel sound make it "say its name"

- Short stressed vowel sounds need a double consonant after them to protect them from being changed by the suffix
- You obviously don't need a double consonant when you already have two consonants
