

Past Continuous Bluffing Card Game

Rules of the game

Deal out the cards so that each person in your group has about the same number. You can look at all your cards, but don't show the other people.

The first person should make a question with "When did you last...?" and the word on one of their cards, e.g. "When did you last see your cousins?" and place that card down on the table. The next person should answer that question using the past continuous and one of their cards, e.g. "When I was walking down the street". If the card is blank, you can use any verb that hasn't been used yet in the game.

If you think that is not a true sentence say "Liar" and they will tell you if the sentence was a lie, in which case they take all the cards on the table and put them in their pack (as a punishment for lying), or if the sentence was true, in which case you have to take all the cards (as a punishment for making an accusation). If you don't think it is a lie, stay silent and the cards stay on the table. The game continues by placing more cards on top of those cards until someone says "Liar". The first person with no cards, or the person with least cards when the teacher stops the game, is the winner.
